CHOCOLATE

ANNUAL REPORT 2007/8

The mission of Divine Chocolate Limited is to improve the livelihood of smallholder cocoa producers in West Africa by establishing their own dynamic brand proposition in the UK chocolate market, thus putting them higher up the value chain.

A FAIRTRADE COMPANY CO-OWNED BY COCOA FARMERS

Chairman's Report

I am confident that Divine Chocolate remains the best chocolate proposition in the market and that through their company, farmers will prosper as never before.

I am proud to present the annual report and accounts for the year to 30 September 2008.

In 2007 – 2008 the company had another year of strong growth. Sales were up 16% to £12.4 million and our chocolate bars are more widely available than ever before. The warning however was in the bottom line. Pre-tax profits fell by 25% to £461,679. The reasons are not hard to find. Competition was fierce, margins were squeezed, exchange rates fluctuated and ‘the market’ became a volatile and difficult place to be. It is greatly to the credit of Sophi Tranchell and her team that the company celebrated its tenth anniversary in excellent shape and I thank them for all the hard work they did during the year.

Sales and profits are only one measure of our success. Divine Chocolate's mission is to improve the livelihoods of West African cocoa farmers by creating a branded chocolate proposition that puts farmers higher up the value chain. It follows that farmers earn several income streams from Divine Chocolate. Increased volumes of Fairtrade cocoa sales mean increased social premiums. Increased turnover means that the company spends more money on ensuring the integrity of our supply chain, and often farmers are beneficiaries of this money. In the past year we supported education programmes, funded work with sugar and other cocoa growers, and supported Kuapa Kokoo's democratic structures. And, of course, there are dividends. I am delighted that for the third consecutive year the Board has recommended payment of a dividend.

I am sad to report the retirement of Kwabena Ohemeng Tinyase from our board. A survivor from the original board of directors, Mr Ohemeng has served the company and the cause of Fairtrade for more than a decade. His resignation from our board coincides with his resignation after 15 years as Managing Director of Kuapa Kokoo Ltd. I am delighted to have worked with him, glad to know him and proud to call him a friend. His wisdom, expertise, humour and unlimited energy will be much missed. On behalf of the board I offer him our sincere thanks and wish him well in his new endeavours.

At the same time I look forward to working with the new MD of Kuapa Kokoo Ltd., Mr Kwasi Aduse-Poku who joined the board in September 2008.

In the years to come the tenth anniversary of Divine will be remembered for being the year that our idea of farmer ownership finally came of age. From the outset we said that one thing which set Divine apart was that it was part-owned by cocoa farmers – but what did ownership really mean? Initially it meant control and empowerment.

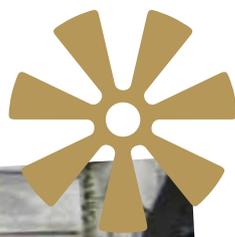

Farmers were owners; farmers sat on the board and were part of every decision the company made. Later it meant increased revenues. Kuapa Kokoo owns 45% of the company; it is the largest shareholder and receives the greatest share of distributed profits. And, latterly, it meant access to capital.

In these extraordinary times, when governments are ‘bailing out’ banks for unimaginable sums, ‘access to capital’ seems like a quaint idea. For Kuapa Kokoo, what it means is this: to trade cocoa Kuapa Kokoo needs to borrow money. Interest rates in Ghana fluctuate around 20%. In Britain, interest rates are a quarter of that – or less. But farmers have previously had no access to it because they lacked both collateral and ‘hard’ currency earnings. Divine Chocolate has changed that. By the year end, Kuapa Kokoo had secured a loan using part of their holding in Divine as collateral, a deal that will save them hundreds of thousands of dollars a year.

For us the year ahead will be challenging. Pressure on prices and margins will continue, and already we have seen new entrants into the market. But I am confident that Divine Chocolate remains the best chocolate proposition in the market and that through their company farmers will prosper as never before.

Sandy Balfour April 2009.

Divine Worldwide

Kuapa farmers Cecilia Appianim and Cecilia Donkor in USA

Divine continues to grow its presence and pursue its mission worldwide – both in terms of growing sales territories, and the impact on the smallholder farmers who benefit from their stake in the business. The new company in USA is flourishing, and Americans in all walks of life are taking the Divine story to their hearts. The 2% of Divine turnover that is earmarked for producer support and development was deployed on a range of projects at Kuapa Kokoo, and is also now helping cocoa farmers in Sierra Leone to establish their own Fairtrade supply chain. Key to making the Divine story resonate with consumers everywhere is the opportunity to connect more directly with producers. As well as ensuring as many people as possible can actually meet cocoa farmers every year, we are also making short films of Kuapa farmers telling their own stories of how Fairtrade and owning Divine impacts on their lives.

Producer Support and Development

In 2007/8, the Producer and Support and Development (PS&D) programme continued to work with Kuapa Kokoo and also provided support to Kasinthula Cane Growers' Trust in Malawi, and Kpeya Agricultural Enterprise, a small cooperative of cocoa farmers in Sierra Leone.

Kuapa Kokoo's R&D Department undertook a major information campaign to provide training on Fairtrade principles, update records and promote better understanding of the organisation. A workshop was held for elected representatives of the National Executive and Area councils, as well as a training programme for women members to promote greater participation in the union, and greater cooperation among women.

The PS&D also worked to strengthen governance procedures and update records in preparation for the annual Fairtrade inspection, and to support its management, while they successfully recruited a new Managing Director.

In Malawi, the PS&D continued to work with the sugar cane growers who supply the cane for Divine's sugar. With support from the PS&D, Kpeya Agricultural Enterprise gained Fairtrade certification (the first Fairtrade certified organisation in Sierra Leone).

Divine in the USA

It has been a second great year of trading for Divine USA. We've seen continued strong growth in sales, with a 100% year on year increase. Cecilia Appianim and Cecilia Donkor travelled to the US from Ghana and together we toured around the country presenting Divine's story to retailers, community groups, student organisations and more. The Cecílias were excellent ambassadors and they proved to be efficacious sales people too, helping to secure listings in some of the leading specialty grocery chains across the USA.

This year we have introduced seasonal products to Borders bookstores in the USA and achieved over 1,000 new store listings. Divine Chocolate also participated in the Sundance Film Festival and found a new fan in actor Mekhi Phifer who is best known for his role of Dr Greg Pratt in US hit series ER!

Filming in Ghana

In November we went out to Ghana with photographer and filmmaker Kim Naylor who has now become one of the leading recorders of cocoa farming worldwide. Divine's aim is to enable a closer connection between producers and consumers – and the objective of the trip was to make some films which bring farmers' lives and experience to life for chocolate lovers here in the UK and around the world. We made six short films featuring four farmers, the daughter of a cocoa farmer, and an employee of Kuapa Kokoo Ltd which focused on six benefits of Fairtrade and ownership of Divine – the well, education, women's empowerment, 'best of the best' cocoa, the recorder, and democracy and good business. They are now live on our website – and have been shown across UK and USA to illustrate the unique Divine story.

This is just the start – we are exploring more ways to connect Kuapa farmers and consumers in a more continuous dialogue.

Divine Nationwide

Divine is not only about delicious chocolate – it is also about doing business differently. This means working in partnership with a wide variety of other brands and organisations to create new business and marketing opportunities for everyone's mutual benefit. As a company owned by farmers, it also means the farmers speaking for themselves, and taking an active role in explaining why a more equitable relationship between North and South is both possible and desirable. As well as another memorable Fairtrade Fortnight farmers' tour, we orchestrated a host of distinctive events courtesy of some wonderful and enjoyable collaborations with partners both old and new.

Paul and Kojo meet President of Ireland Mary McAleese

Fairtrade Fortnight 2008

One of the highlights of the Divine year is welcoming farmers from Kuapa Kokoo here in the UK to tour with us for Fairtrade Fortnight. This year we dubbed it the "Chocolate Makes the World go Round" tour, and set off to participate in events in London, South West England, Wales, Ireland and Northern Ireland, where the farmers met schoolchildren, shoppers and retailers, church groups and local businesses, government officials and Fairtrade activists.

This year Kuapa Kokoo farmers Kojo Aduhene-Tano and Paul Ayepah (our first male farmer visitors for Fairtrade Fortnight!) made excellent ambassadors for Kuapa Kokoo and Divine. They travelled around sharing their stories of how Fairtrade, and owning a chocolate company, has changed their lives – and in turn discovering how much we love chocolate here in the UK.

Highlights of this year's tour for Kojo and Paul included discovering cocoa growing in the UK at the Eden Project, meeting a large number of mayors (and trying on their regalia!), as well as hundreds of schoolchildren who loved hearing about life in Ghana and seeing real cocoa pods for the first time.

Divine Events

This year Divine organised a new area at the popular Thames Festival. The Fairtrade Village, sponsored by The Co-operative, brought together stalls from eight of the leading Fairtrade brands selling an assortment of Fairtrade goods including chocolate, candyfloss, fruit, wines and coffee. Visitors enjoyed browsing the stalls and learning more about the Fairtrade London Campaign whilst listening to jazz music played by live bands and school musicians.

In October Divine offered a week of pure chocolate indulgence during National Chocolate Week, the annual celebration of real chocolate which Divine co-sponsors. We collaborated with restaurants, hotels, venues and shops all over the UK to offer some special Divine experiences, giving as many people as possible the chance to sample great chocolate, and hear the Divine story, as well as announcing some delicious new Divine products.

We hosted a "Divine and Wine" tasting session for 200 delegates at the New Wine Annual Conference in July and sampled Divine chocolate on a grand scale for the 20,000 festival goers at Greenbelt Christian arts and music festival in August.

Divine on Show

There are a number of consumer shows each year where Divine has proved an enormous hit. In November we headed for the BBC Good Food Show, at the NEC in Birmingham - an opportunity to meet thousands of chocolate lovers, excite some loyal fans with new flavours and make many new converts. Later at Spirit of Christmas in London we did a roaring trade with our lovely Christmas range. We once again had the opportunity to give a talk at the Destinations show in January - a taste of Divine proving very popular as visitors fuelled their wanderlust. There were many more shows throughout the year where, courtesy of friends and Fairtrade partners, Divine had a presence on other stands, and in cafes and goodie bags.

Divine also exhibits at a number of trade shows - which this year included Caffe Culture, the NEC Food & Drink Expo and The Union Show. They provide good forums for meeting old and new customers, and, particularly at The Union show - getting great feedback about how popular Divine is with Student Unions.

Young people take on a MISSION:POSSIBLE!

Divine's sister brand Dubble had a fantastic year inspiring even more great ideas from young people.

The tastiest website in the world, dubble.co.uk, got even tastier with the exciting new addition of a great new challenge, codename MISSION:POSSIBLE.

The MISSION:POSSIBLE action pack provides young supporters with everything they need to engage their local communities and families with Fairtrade and Dubble. It was developed in collaboration with Comic Relief and inspired by Dubble's young Fairtrade activists, Dubble Agents, who wanted more 'missions' to help them change the world 'chunk by chunk'!

Two children from Kuapa Kokoo farming families, Dubble Agent Kizito (Stephen) and Dubble Agent Eskumbrical (Joycelyn), came to the UK to launch MISSION:POSSIBLE as part of the 2008 Fairtrade schools conferences.

This year also saw the unveiling of 'Choca Monkey' - the online game built by top media designers, Atticmedia. 'Choca Monkey' was created by 13-year-old Grace Conium, and was the winning entry for the 'DubbleClick' computer game competition.

The game was passed on virally throughout the network of thousands of Dubble Agents and beyond, responding to the message "Don't break the chain... fast forward the game"!

Gareth Thomas, Minister for Trade and Development, commented, "Young consumers are to be congratulated for their increasing interest in supporting Fairtrade projects. I have to congratulate the DubbleClick computer competition winner Grace Conium."

Dubble continues to bring Fairtrade to the youth market in a popular and delicious way and to support our Dubble Agent community to take action and create 'choc'n'change'!

London's Fairtrade City Campaign

MD of Divine, Sophi Tranchell has been appointed Chair of the London Fairtrade Steering Group. The steering group has been charged with promoting Fairtrade across the capital with the ultimate aim of London becoming the world's largest Fairtrade city by the end of 2008.

Sophi said: "I am delighted that people all over London are doing their bit to support Fairtrade. We want London to be the biggest Fairtrade city in the world, making this magnificent and historic city a celebration of, and testament to, how trade can be done with dignity and respect."

Poetry Competition

Now in its sixth year, the Divine/Christian Aid Poetry Competition continues to attract thousands of entries from children and adults from all over the country. This year acclaimed children's author, Michael Morpurgo headed up the judging panel for the final selection.

Writing on the theme Chocolate Makes the World Go Round, contrasting the lives of chocolate lovers and cocoa growers, there were some wonderful evocative poems.

Faith Lucas (age 13), of Penwortham Girls High School was one of the winners in the 12-16 age group with her poem 'Chocolate Money'.

Chocolate Money

Chocolate money, chocolate coins
Chocolate through and through
Chocolate is just chocolate
That's all it is to you.

You want the cheapest chocolate
But you don't know what this means
You might as well use chocolate money
To buy my cocoa beans

You like the taste of chocolate
Chocolate pounds and chocolate pence
Someone somewhere is making money
But it doesn't make any sense

I work hard through the days
And sometimes even nights
But I still don't get a fair deal
Equality and rights

We can't live on chocolate money
We don't want handouts or aid
We want the right price for our cocoa
And an offer of Fairtrade.

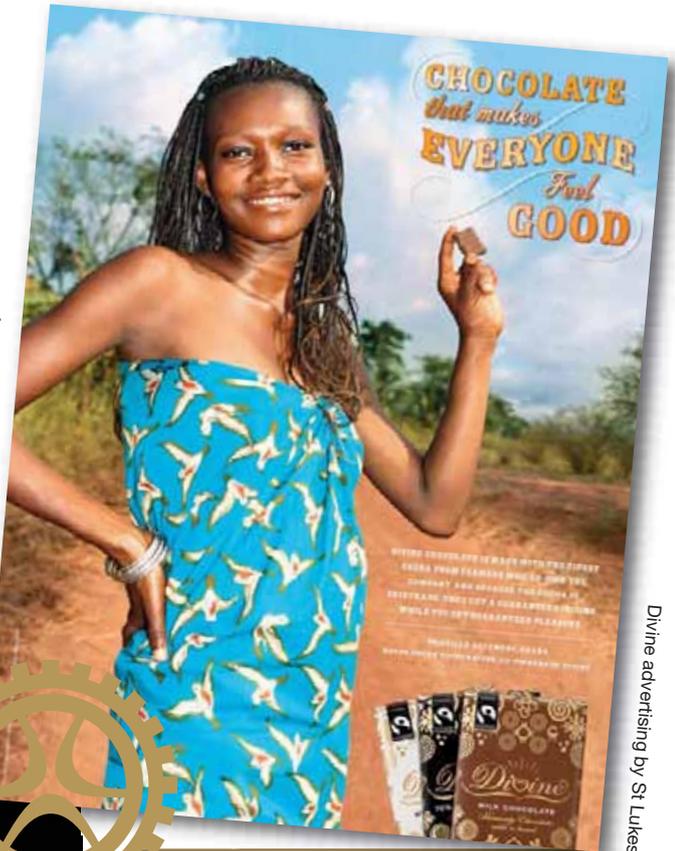

Now we have a lifeline
With real money we can cope
Fairtrade came to our rescue
Divine gave us hope

Divine Makes the News

Divine enjoyed some excellent seasonal and new product coverage in the consumer press, and as always, a fantastic round up covering Fairtrade Fortnight. There is still a great appetite for stories about the different ways Fairtrade works. We were particularly pleased with a major colour feature in The Independent (December 2007) by Rose Skelton – who stayed in Bayerebon3 village for several days with photographer Aubrey Wade. Together they created a rich and beautifully observed picture of life in the village and the reality for cocoa farmers. Kevin Gould's diary of Kuapa Kokoo life in Waitrose Food Illustrated was also an excellent piece. Sophi Tranchell's appointment as a Social Enterprise Ambassador and invitation to join Gordon Brown's Council for Social Action led to a series of articles in the business press.

Divine advertising by St Lukes

Divine Advertising

For the latest campaign, which appeared in national supplements, lifestyle and ethical media, Divine revisited the extremely striking images of young women from the Kuapa community.

Choosing a new selection of images from the original shoot, ad agency St Lukes refreshed the messages to communicate all the ways Divine makes you feel good.

Social Media

For the second year running Divine ran a blog during Fairtrade Fortnight – recording a diary of all the travelling, events and experiences of the two Kuapa farmers Paul Ayepah and Kojo Aduhene Tano. We want to explore social media like this as yet another way to bridge the gap between producers and consumers. The films we made in Ghana also appeared on YouTube, as did a really nice little animated 'Divine story' created for us by Anwyn Beier.

Divine Awards

We were delighted that in 2008 we were named top 'Ethical Business' at the prestigious Observer Ethical Awards, presented in association with Ecover.

Shortlisted for this category with fellow Fairtrade business Equal Exchange, and www.walkit.com, Divine was selected unanimously by an impressive panel of judges including the high profile personalities Colin Firth, Jon Snow and Natalie Imbruglia, as well as ethical experts including Juliet Davenport of Good Energy and Sian Berry of the Green Party.

The international business college Huron University (now renamed Hult University) also honoured Divine with their first annual award to a business in recognition of its social mission and success as an ethical business model.

It was also great to add two product awards in 2008 – the Good Housekeeping Favourite Fairtrade Product award – voted for by Good Housekeeping's large and influential readership, and the Peta 'Proggy' best vegan product award for Divine's Mint Dark Chocolate bar.

Sophi Tranchell receives the Observer Ethical Business Award from compere Marcus Brigstocke and Lucy Siegle of The Observer.

Divine Growth

Our strategy is to get more Divine, to more people, in more places! To this end we continue to grow our reach and sales across Europe and beyond, and take great pleasure in ensuring that you can find Divine in all sorts of places you'd expect to buy your chocolate treat – and some where you wouldn't! Our steady growth – still at 16% year on year – is also down to ensuring we keep coming up with new and irresistible products for all tastes and occasions...

When isn't the right time to enjoy something Divine!

Divine export sales grew by 60% to £850,000 in the last year and we now have sales in nine territories across the globe. Holland is our most valuable export market and Divine products are increasingly popular across Scandinavia, particularly our innovative seasonal products. Charging for Divine products in euros also helps us mitigate our exchange rate exposure.

New from Divine

It was a particularly spectacular year for new product launches, including new seasonal products, new gift ideas and a sensational new bar! For Christmas 2007 we introduced luxury hand finished chocolates in an elegant black box, available exclusively in Waitrose and Borders book shops nationwide. The new chocolates were a hit, so we developed more boxed chocolate offers for the following Christmas season - introducing milk and white chocolate truffles. We doubled our Easter range with a new Milk Chocolate egg (with added mini eggs) - a big success in Boots and Morrisons - a chic handbag filled with milk mini eggs which sold out through Waitrose and Lakeland, and a new bag of dark chocolate mini eggs for grown-up egg hunts. The quintessential taste of high summer was the inspiration for Divine's White Chocolate with Strawberries bar, a very moreish combination, which arrived in time for Wimbledon.

Divine in New Places

Divine product listings continued to grow with increased availability across larger retailers and suppliers. Sainsbury's included the Dark Fruit & Nut bar, and 3663 (the food catering supplier) listed the Divine Milk with Orange 45g bar. Both Waitrose and Traidcraft listed a selection from the Divine Delights range, and the National Trust listed chocolate coins for Christmas 2008. Bags of Divine mini baked goods were stocked by Waitrose, and Divine muffins were selected as in-flight treats for Virgin Atlantic travellers.

Divine People

Sara Barron, having worked for some time with us to coordinate development of the Dubble website and community, joined the staff as Dubble HQ Producer. Rosanna Mayhew joined us in the role of PR Assistant, fresh from working with Virgin on charity initiatives, and we also welcomed Simone Lindsay as our new receptionist.

Looking ahead to Divine's 10th birthday

We started to prepare celebrations for Divine's 10th birthday – a proud achievement for a bold company establishing its place in a huge and competitive market. We wanted to acknowledge and thank the key individuals, networks and organisations that have played a part in Divine's extraordinary journey – and celebrate the farmers of Kuapa Kokoo without whom we would not be here. The 'Decade of Divine' exhibition captures the story visually and in words – and will tour the UK during 2009.

"Happy Birthday to Divine Chocolate. I am very encouraged by the continuing growth of the Fairtrade movement. Divine Chocolate is particularly special because the cocoa workers in Ghana are represented on the Board of the Company. I feel proud every time I see Divine for sale – which seems to be more and more frequent."

Clare Short MP (ex Secretary of State for International Development, DFID 1999)

Trading Visions is the educational and campaigning charity set up to build on the award-winning Fairtrade education work undertaken in partnership between Divine Chocolate, Comic Relief and Kuapa Kokoo.

We have had a busy and inspiring year. Trading Visions and Comic Relief worked together in 2007 to install satellite broadband internet access to two Kuapa Kokoo supported schools in Ghana. This enabled us to begin a new strand of our education work focusing on using video conferencing to scale up face-to-face contact between young people in the UK and in Ghana.

The video conferencing sessions we have run throughout the year at schools and events have been amazingly successful and have often had a profound impact on the young people involved.

"This experience will change our lives forever as we have seen how pupils in another country very different from ours live, and the differences and similarities between our lives. As a result of this we feel it is our duty to buy Fairtrade goods whenever they are available."

Report by Year 10 pupils at Ogmere Comprehensive School, Bridgend

In February 2008, Trading Visions accompanied ITV Wales to Ghana to film four short news programmes on Kuapa Kokoo and Fairtrade, which were aired during Fairtrade Fortnight in Wales. One of the programmes focused on our first ever video conferencing session between one of the Ghana schools and a school in Wales.

The highlight of the year was bringing over two young people – Stephen and Joycelyn – from Kuapa Kokoo communities, funded by the Fairtrade Foundation. Stephen and Joycelyn were great ambassadors for Kuapa Kokoo and spoke at three large Fairtrade schools conferences in June 2008. Everyone attending agreed they were the star attraction.
